The Big Question boardroom debates

Three closed sessions debating the important questions facing the industry. These are sponsored events and invitation only. Chatham House Rules apply.

Over breakfast, each boardroom debate (with approximately 16 attendees from a mix of disciplines) will discuss the challenges facing the industry and the practical solutions to these challenges.

Session one:

Stakeholder best practice - sponsored by

Success of projects and the P3 model depends on the experience of elected officials. How can advisors and proposers ensure elected officials are behind a project at every milestone?

Unforeseen setbacks for a particular project, or for a P3 project in a completely different jurisdiction, can result in elected officials withdrawing support. How can setbacks be managed so projects can be delivered when required and on budget?

What does the industry need to understand about what elected officials require of public sector staff and vice versa?

What is best practice in delivering a project that is a result of, or affected by, an unsolicited proposal?

Ignacio Barandiaran, Principal and Board Director

Session two:

Exponential technology - sponsored by

New technologies are changing how people and things will transit and communicate in the future, and governments are watching.

Can P3 models adapt to fundamental changes in how infrastructure challenges are solved?

Is the SMART cities debate now defunct?

What does new technology mean for teaming and bids?

Liam Kelly, Principal, KPMG
